Accomplishments:

Guy Sylvestre was a major figure in Canadian literature particularly in bridging the gap between French and English Canada with a number of important publications. He was literary critic for Le Droit in Ottawa from 1940 to 1949, the founder and editor of Gants du ciel and Nouvelle canadienne 1951-1956. A senior civil servant in the federal government, he worked for Louis St. Laurent in several capacities when St. Laurent was Minister of Justice, then Minister for External Affairs and lastly Prime Minister. He spent fifteen years at the Library of Parliament as Assistant Parliamentary Librarian, Associate Parliamentary Librarian and Acting Parliamentary Librarian until being named as Canada's second National Librarian in 1968.

During Dr. Sylvestre's term of office as National Librarian the National Library Act was substantially revised. Under his leadership there was a dramatic growth in the collections, programs, and services of the National Library, enabled by substantial increases in resources. In addition to building up the Library's Canadiana, official publications and reference collections and services, he oversaw the establishment of specialized collections and services in music, library documentation, children's literature, multilingual publications, literary manuscripts, handicapped persons and rare books (including the Jacob M. Lowy Collection of Hebraica and Judaica). The Canadian Book Exchange Centre was established. In partnership with CISTI a library system, DOBIS, was put in place and made accessible nationally. Major exhibitions, public programming and a major publications program became the norm. Core services such as legal deposit and national bibliographic and resource sharing services were strengthened. Library standards were put in place and a national decentralized network of libraries buttressed. The Canadian library community was involved through committees and task forces of librarians from across the country on groups ranging from the National Library Advisory Board to the Task Group on Cataloguing Standards, on matters such as MARC, cataloguing and other library standards, services to the handicapped, resource sharing and the Canadian Union Catalogue, and bibliographic services and most significantly on the future direction of the National Library with consultations around the project, The Future of the National Library. Guy Sylvestre played a strong role in the international library community establishing the Conference of Directors of National Libraries and supporting and contributing to many international initiatives such as ISDS, ISBN, and CONSER.Papers.

He was editor of Le Droit from 1940–1948; of Gants du ciel, 1943–1956; and Nouvelle revue canadienne, 1951–1956. He lectured at the University of Ottawa after 1954.
