Achievements and Comments

Ian began work at the Canadian Bibliographic Centre in November 1952 then housed in a corner of a museum room on the ground floor of the Public Archives building at 330 Sussex Street in Ottawa (now the Global Centre for Pluralism). Something of an academic prodigy, he was one of four librarians and four clerical staff and the first male employee of the Centre, soon to become the National Library of Canada. His visits to microfilm card catalogues for the national union catalogue in Hamilton (Mills Memorial Library at McMaster University and Hamilton Public Library) and Kingston (Queen's University, Royal Military College and Fort Frontenac libraries) were chronicled in the October 20, 1954 Hamilton Spectator ("All Being Filmed: Book Files On Record For Future") and the August 22, 1955 Kingston Whig Standard ("Libraries Here on the List"). Ian helped to create a number of specialized services at the National Library including rare books, children's literature and handicapped persons. He led the national Task Group on Library Service to the Handicapped and was the first editor of the National Library News (1969-1972). In addition to organizing exhibitions for the National Library including "Olympic Sports in Art and Literature" (1976) and "National Library of Canada: the first Twenty-Five Years exhibition (1978).

Awards: Queen Elizabeth II Silver Jubilee Medal (1977)
