Comments:

Irma was "a life-long advocate for intellectual freedom, and Canadian children's literature. A rich cultural and political childhood growing up in a northern Finnish community spawned Irma's ambitions and vigorous working life in Toronto as librarian, editor, author [and] consultant for Canadian children's literature."

"In 1967, as a Centennial project, [Irma] began In Review, a journal for Canadian children's books [and] in 1976, [she] spearheaded a project that led to the establishment of the Canadian Children's Book Centre".

"Her work allowed travel to many towns in Ontario, Italy, Germany, Cuba and then to Finland for editorial work at the World Peace Council."

"Irma's love of Canadian children's literature was reflected in her personal life as well as her professional career."
