Associations/Committees:

Bibliographical Society of Canada, President 1966-68
Canadian Library Association, President 1970-71

Accomplishments:

While at the Toronto Public Library, she was an editor of the Canadian Catalogue of Books. From 1946-1971 she was an adviser to the CLA newspaper microfilming project. In 1950: the first librarian hired by W. Kaye Lamb to help establish the National Library of Canada. She was responsible for planning and organizing the Canadian Union Catalogue and visited libraries across the country to microfilm their catalogue cards using a 16 mm camera. This formed the nucleus of what is now the AMICUS database. From 1966-1968, she was President, Bibliographical Society of Canada and in 1970-1971 President, Canadian Library Association. 1971: Upon her retirement, she was described as one of Canada's most distinguished librarians as well as charming and gracious. Her firm, far-seeing leadership and strong sense of professionalism were noted.
