Honours:

The Robert H. Blackburn Distinguished Paper Award presented annually by the Canadian Library Association was named in his honour.

The University Library built a state-of-the-art conference room, the Robert H. Blackburn Room, in his honour.

The University of Toronto, Faculty of Library and Information Science, honoured him as a distinguished graduate on May 4, 1989.

Blackburn received the University of Toronto 65th anniversary Chancellor's Medal in May 2007. He has received honorary doctorates from the Universities of Waterloo, McGill and Toronto.

Accomplishments:

Blackburn served a distinguished career as Chief Librarian at the University of Toronto from 1954 to 1981.

"Under his leadership the Library built many world class collections [adding almost five million volumes] and became a world leader in development of information technology tools and services subsequently adopted by libraries around the world. What he would see as his crowning achievement was the John P. Robarts Research Library and the adjacent Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library which were conceived and built during his tenure, opening in 1973. With over 1 million square feet, the Roberts Library complex is one of the world's leading research libraries."

"The Fisher Library of rare books has inspired generations of students, but even more inspiring is the extraordinary collection that Bob started. One of the great Canadian treasures is the "First Folio Shakespeare", a book of enormous importance. Bob convinced the Fisher family to give it, and the rest of one of the most important Shakespeare's collections in the world to UTL, to be housed in the Fisher Library. That donation attracted many more great gifts over many generations."

"The research library and generations of students past and future owe him a great debt of gratitude."

During his career, Blackburn was also involved in the design of other Canadian academic libraries and of some small community libraries including the Streetsville Public Library Branch in Mississauga, Ontario.

“He administered the Ontario New Libraries Project under the Ontario Ministry of Education, creating the initial 35,000 book collection for each of three new Ontario universities (Trent, Brock and Guelph) and for Scarborough and Erindale colleges.”

“Blackburn’s 1968 study of the future financial needs for libraries for the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada was used to plan the development of academic libraries throughout Canada.”
