

ELA: A National Association

The Ex Libris Association, founded in 1986, is the Canadian national association of people who have spent an important part of their working life in libraries, archives, museums, publishing houses, and adjunct fields, and who are attracted to current or historical issues related to those institutions as well as to issues concerning the personal interests of their fellow members. Our objectives, our constitution, our executive and other committees, and our history all reflect our long-standing and ongoing concern for issues related to information services.

As times change, our goals have broadened to exploit new technologies and to address important new issues, such as reconciliation and recognition of Indigenous peoples. We are a government-recognized nonprofit organization. ELA is a member of the Canadian Federation of Library Associations–La Fédération canadienne des associations de bibliothèques (CFLA-FCAB), which is the united, national voice of Canada's library community.
